

Resume-Interview Success, LLC Presents:

430 ACTION VERBS THAT WILL MOVE YOUR RESUME TO THE TOP OF THE PILE

How many times have you written “Responsible for” or “Helped” or “Led” on your resume? With the job market as competitive as it is, your resume has to score well in an ATS system, grab a reader’s attention quickly, sell your value proposition, and distinguish you from other applicants.

*Studies have shown that the average recruiter scans a resume for about 8 seconds
before deciding whether to invest the time in reading the entire resume.*

The best way to grab a reader’s attention is to use dynamic action verbs when describing your achievements, successes, and accomplishments. But how do you find effective and dynamic action verbs? You can only get so many synonyms from a thesaurus. This comprehensive article contains 430 action verbs, broken down by achievement or activity.

When selecting action verbs for your resume, keep in mind what your “value proposition” is. Your “value proposition” is what makes you a unique candidate and explains how you will add value to the company you are applying to. The action verbs that you select need to support and sell your “value proposition”. Be sure to pair your action verbs with quantifiable or qualitative achievement whenever possible. If you work in sales or finance, you have access to obvious metrics like sales volume, market share and profitability, but don’t forget about people-oriented numbers like customers served, people managed, and performance rank (#1 sales person).

Quantitative and qualitative achievements can be detailed in many ways. Some ideas include:

- ✦ Dollars ✦ Percentages ✦ Volume ✦ Ranking ✦ Cost-containment ✦ Sales
- ✦ Customers ✦ Time to completion ✦ Profitability ✦ Hires ✦ Followers ✦ Process Improvements
- ✦ Market Share ✦ Conversion Rates

Action Verbs To Highlight How You Changed or Improved Something or Reduced Something Negative

Some clients tell me “I have no quantifiable or qualitative achievements to include on my resume.” It doesn’t matter if you are a CEO, an administrative professional, an automotive technician, or a nurse, everyone can find some quantifiable or qualitative achievements to include on their resume. Look at your performance ratings, customer comments, or special projects or assignments that you volunteered for. Look at the job description for the job you want to apply to, see what skills or accomplishments they are looking for, and then see what you have done or achieved that matches.

Administrative Professional - Decreased office supplies cost by $58K by switching from an expensive supplier to a cheaper one that offered the same quality.

Automotive Technician - Trained 5 techs and finished jobs 15% faster than the company average.

Nurse - Developed and implemented a new patient care plan, increasing patient confidence by 35%.

Action Verbs To Highlight That You Achieved Something

When deciding what to include as an achievement on your resume, be sure to fully review the requirements of your target role and decide which of your accomplishments are relevant. Some things to consider are:

1. Can I quantify the skill or accomplishment?
2. Is the skill relevant or transferable to the job I'm targeting?
3. Is this something that I would be excited speaking to during an interview?

Whenever possible, flip the CAR formula (Challenge, Action, and Result) and start your bullets on your resume with the dollar or percent at the beginning of the sentence (Results, Action, and Challenge), followed by the “how” and “why”.

Action Verbs To Highlight That You Supported Customers

What is a customer? Every job, every position has a customer. It could be internal or external or both. If you are in finance, your internal customer could be the auditing department and your external customer could be the IRS or SEC. To effectively support a customer, you need to have great communication skills, must be empathetic and have patience, and must have the necessary technical knowledge.
